In 2011-2012 our program decided to utilize the Stefan Swanepoel book “Surviving your Serengeti” as the theme for the calendar year. The book “Surviving your Serengeti” takes the reader on a journey through the Serengeti with 7 animals that exemplify skills that if utilized are very important to successful individuals. Examples of the skills discussed in the book are: communication, risk taking, grace and efficiency. These are also the skills that we decided to focus on during the fall semester with our students. In the upcoming spring semester we will focus on the last three skills: endurance, strategy and enterprising. We feel our students will receive a great deal of use from these skills as they journey through their college experience here at the College of Charleston. The skills that are defined and expounded upon in the book are essential to the growth of our students while in our program and even beyond it.

During the staff training and peer mentor retreat the ROAR Scholar Staff envisions, visualizes and creates a PATH for the program for the year.
